

Courtney Gray

I am an undergraduate sophomore majoring in Justice Studies and pursuing a minor in Photography. My career goal is to attend law school and some day be elected judge here in California. I would like to do corporate law but my heart is really with criminal law because I think criminal law would be more fascinating. I understand that law school is extremely hard work and not very cheap, so I try to keep that in mind when I get a little stressed out, realizing that someday once I have obtained my goals I will know that it was worth all the stress. I am always challenging myself to do something bigger or better.

This career path is something I have always talked about achieving since I was nine years old. I am now twenty and fulfilling my dream step by step, one semester at a time and I could not be more excited. In high school I found one of my deepest passions, photography and started to realize that it became a relaxing hobby of mine when I joined my year book staff in high school. I loved it so much that I was determined to be the editor the following year and my hard work was a success. So now I take fun photography classes with the stressful ones so I can create a balance .

I keep myself very busy working two jobs, one as a secretary and the other as a supervisor, while attending school full time and still wish I could be doing more. I would love to find a job or an internship at a law office of any kind. I would just appreciate being around the type of experience and mind set that one day I am going to need to be successful.
