

Javier Clorio

Graduate Student – Mass Communications/Broadcast Journalism

Javier Clorio loves, lives and adores his modo, "If you are not having fun, just quit it" he thinks you have to enjoy everything you do in life. Javier was born and raised in Mexico city where he studied a bachelors degree in marketing he then worked in an advertising agency as a creative director for a year and a half, after realizing he liked and miss school he decided to go back and get a masters in Mass Communications at San Jose State University. He thinks that by studying communications, he can make a difference.

He loves to make people laugh, he also takes a lot of pleasure helping others, and in Mexico Javier donated his time in an orphanage and a house for the elderly. He believes volunteering at these 2 places helped him grow more as a person and assisted him in finding sense of what he was doing with his live.

Javier is also very close to his mom, he loves talking with her and believes they have pretty much the same personality. In the other hand he also enjoys hanging out with his dad because he is the balance of the family. He sees his mom as an intellectual guide and his dad as an emotional one.

Javier sometimes feels like he is chasing a stupid and absurd dream about changing the world, but he senses that if he stops running everything he has done so far has not been worth the effort.